Dear Friends and Colleagues,

It is our pleasure to welcome you to the 7th EURIPA Rural Health Forum, which is taking place in Panormo, Crete, Greece, on 2 - 4 of November 2017. This year's Forum is entitled "Rural Renaissance" and focuses on the importance of rural health in a constantly changing environment, predominated by the ongoing European financial and refugee crisis. The Forum is designed to bring together physicians, health professionals and medical trainees, working in rural health settings. It also offers the opportunity for everyone to contribute in discussing important issues regarding population health and health care services' delivery in rural settings, through sessions, lectures and workshops.

The aim of the 2017 meeting is to promote synergy and solidarity between rural health practitioners, researchers, health policy makers and academicians. The program includes a wide range of interesting topics focusing on rural research, education and practice, summarized in seven major plenary themes: "Implementation science in rural settings", "Ecology and environmental change", "Cancer and rurality: Inspire action, take action", "Lifestyle and health with focus on smoking and nutrition", "financial and refugee crisis and the role of rural communities", "Healthy and active ageing and wellbeing", and "education and training of rural GPs". A wide range of networks and working parties have been also invited to contribute to the Forum by joining their forces in workshops and round tables promoting integrated and interdisciplinary approaches of health care.

It is well known that Greece has been affected by the economic crisis and the Greek population struggles from austerity which has had a profound impact on people living in rural areas. As such, we feel it very fitting that our Forum is being held on the beautiful island of Crete, where issues related to rural health populations are more evident today than ever. Together we will discuss not only the issues being faced but also solutions. Together we will increase our collective capacity to improve practice and research in rural health settings to better meet the needs of residents.

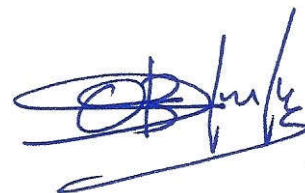

We wish you a productive and enjoyable Forum!
